SHARKFLESH MAKES DELICIOUS FOOD SAYS EXPERT

Department of Fisheries Tries to Overcome Prejudice Against Eatible Fish Which Are Nourishing.

Washington, May 12.—Although consumers have been eating dog meat, horseflesh and sawdust in the shape of sausages and a few other things manufactured and put on sale under fanciful names, a new and startling relish is about to be put on the market—canned shark.

Through investigations conducted by the department of agriculture, caned shark has been declared to be wholesome and, when prepared by a skillful "fish chef," is just as delicious to the palate as any other kind of canned fish.

This new commodity cannot be sold, however, unless it is named as such on the label of the package. This decision comes under the provisions of the pure food law. In cases where horseflesh was put on sale in markets and shops under fancy names, the department of agriculture took decisive steps to protect the public, so that everything now sold for human consumption must be correctly and clearly named on the label to prevent fraud.

The idea of canned shark came to the attention of American manufacturers of canned goods from a band of fish which Canadian manufacturers sought to sell in the United States. The department of agriculture asked whether or not Canadian merchants would be allowed to put canned dogfish on the market in America.

In Japan, where the people are connoisseurs of food, the shark is highly prized as an article of diet. The sharks are brought to the market alive and slaughtered much as are cattle in this and European countries. Tenson Woods, an expert of the department of agriculture, who is an authority upon this subject, says that the flesh of shark contains more nutriment than that of any other fish. In view of this fact, the dogfish, a shark relative, but owing to its small size, quite innocent of devouring human beings, is a very good food and ought to be utilized as an edible instead of being wasted by using it as fertilizer.

In Nova Scotia, Ireland, Scotland and Norway, the horned dogfish is used as food in considerable quantities. In places in England, the dogfish is placed on the market as "prepared beef." The flesh of the fish is white and free from the disagreeable smell with which larger sharks are tainted. The eggs are used in foreign countries for making puddings, pancakes, etc.

For Good Reasons.

"Why, Tommy," exclaimed the Sunday school teacher, "don't you say your prayers every night before you go to bed?"

"Not any more," replied Tommy. "I awoke when I slept in the folding bed, though."—Philadelphia Record.

FIGHT ON WHITE PLAGUE GAINING

From statistics published today in the new directory of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, it is ascertained that over 600 cities and towns of the United States, besides about 100 in Canada, are engaged in the war against consumption, and that on April 1 there were nearly 12,000 different agencies at work in the crusade, from which it tapers abruptly back to a short tail. The mouth is very wide, is surrounded with a fringe of barbs and has an enormous capacity. The average length is about three feet.

Other fish which are abundant in the streams and waters adjacent to the coast line of the country fit for food, but which are not used, are the daddy seahip, the blue-striped trigger fish, the mud puppy so much decried by fish experts as an excellent food. A specimen of this fish is on exhibition at the national museum here and on a label is posted a line stating that this fish is good for food. Thousands of the mud puppies are caught and used for fertilizer.

In Nova Scotia, Ireland, Scotland and Norway, the horned dogfish is used as food in considerable quantities. In places in England, the dogfish is placed on the market as "prepared beef." The flesh of the fish is white and free from the disagreeable smell with which larger sharks are tainted. The eggs are used in foreign countries for making puddings, pancakes, etc.

The bureau of fisheries recently conducted an investigation in the matter of the adaptability of the dogfish for food. If the prejudice against the dogfish and shark as a food could be removed, the experts say one of the
